CHAPTER I

INTRODUCTION

A. Background of the study

Levinson (1983: 54) states that deixis concerns the way in which languages encode or grammaticalize features of the context of utterance or speech event, and thus also concerns ways in which the interpretation of utterances depends on the analysis of that context of utterance. Words are deixis if their semantic meaning is fixed but their denotational meaning varies depending on time and/or place. Words or phrases that require contextual information to convey any meaning. Deixis is an important field of language study in its own right and very important for learners of second languages. Deixis refers to the phenomenon where in understanding the meaning of certain words and phrases in an utterance requires contextual information. It has some relevance to analysis of conversation and pragmatics. Deixis has the function to point or specify the perspective of a participant in an act of speech or writing, aspects of a communication whose interpretation depends on knowledge of the context in which the communication occurs semantics the study of language meaning.

In fact, people are still confused to describe and even to determine what deixis is and which one we call deixis. The present study examined the acquisition of deixis by asking people (children age 4, 5, 6) to identify the speaker or the addressee of utterances containing come, go, bring, and take. The results showed that they appeared to understand come and bring, but not go and take. Analysis of the strategies used showed that children go through several stages: (a) they identify both speaker and addressee with the goal of the motion; (b) they identify only the addressee with the goal; (c) they identify the addressee of go with the goal, but are otherwise correct; (d) they give adult-like responses. These data provided further evidence that strategies play an important role in the acquisition of word meanings. This research was supported in part by the National Science Foundation, Grant No. GS-30040. It is created because people have no deep understanding about deixis.

Deixis help us to explain the meaning of writing text, someone speech and to do good communication. Meaning is the thing or idea that wishes to communicate to you by what they say or do. Without meaning, all the utterances in any language become meaningless. The exact meaning of the word communicate is 'to share' or 'to participate'. The dictionaries say that communication is the transmission of a message or information by speaking or writing. Another dictionary declares that communication is giving or exchanging information, signals, messages by talk or gestures or writing. Yet another definition says that communication is social intercourse. Communication is all this and much more. A good definition should not only give the precise meaning but also throw light on the scope of the word / expression. Communication is giving, receiving or exchanging ideas, information, signals or messages through appropriate media, enabling individuals or groups to persuade, to seek information, to give information or to express emotions. And usually people communicate with language.

Language itself is a system of sounds and words to express one's personal reaction, emotions and thought as well as to share information in daily social life. Words are combined into sentences, this combination answering to that of ideas into thoughts. Language is meaningful, when the meaning is conveyed though language. People use language to interact and establish relation, to influence their behavior and express the expression of the word. Language is used to facilitate communication, in the sense of transmission of information from one person to another. Language is thought to have originated when early hominins. It started gradually changing their primate communication systems, acquiring the ability to form a theory of other minds and a shared intentionality.

Language shows up in both spoken and written form. For example: debate. Debate is usually contention in argument, strife, dissension, quarrelling, controversy; especially a formal discussion of subjects before a public assembly or legislature, in Parliament or in any deliberative assembly. Debating is also carried out for educational and recreational purposes, usually associated with educational establishments and debating societies. The major goal of the study of debate as a method or art is to develop the ability to debate rationally from either position with equal ease. It shows that it is very interesting to analyze, especially presidential debate in America Trump vs Hillary.

Presidential debate related to usage of deixis in it. Deixis concern to interpretation of utterances. So in this case deixis is useful to indicate who the object is and subject in that presidential debate. Debate is one of the way to speech. Debate is a way to express the opinion we have. Deixis also functions to make the utterances more understand to listener. So, the presidential debate will be easy to listen and understand and the listener are not getting bored to hear the debate.

In reality when people heard video even debate video they didn't know that deixis can help them to indicate who object is and subject. To indicate them, people should know the types of deixis and dominant type of deixis itself. They couldn't find dominant type of deixis and they didn't know why dominant types of deixis can occur. Actually it is interesting if people want to learn about deixis. Source: (www.sciencedirect.com/science/article/pii/S0378216699000405).

Therefore based on the explanation above the researcher would like to conduct the "Analysis of Deixis on the Presidential Debate Trump vs Hillary". Analyzing the deixis in presidential debate help us to know belongs to what motion the debate is from deixis used. So, we can understand the debate easily. A deep understanding is regarded as an important information which is focused by most of the audiences. Hopefully it can improve people knowledge especially in deixis.

B. The Identification of the Problem

Based on the explanation above, the problem of this research was identified as the following:

- 1. The listeners were difficult to determine the types of deixis.
- 2. The listeners didn't know the function of each type of deixis.

C. The Scope and Limitation of the Study

The scope of this study was focused on pragmatics and it was limited on deixis on the presidential debate Trump vs Hillary.

D. The Formulation of the Problem

The problem of the study was formulated as the following:

- 1. What types of deixis were used on Presidential Debate Trump vs Hillary?
- 2. What was dominant types of deixis on the Presidential Debate Trump vs Hillary?

E. The Objectives of the Study

The objectives of this study as follows:

- 1. to describe the types of deixis on Presidential Debate Trump vs Hillary.
- to find out the most dominant types of deixis on the Presidential Debate
 Trump vs Hillary.

F. The Significances of the Study

1. Theoretically:

The result of this study was expected to contribute the development of deixis theory.

- 2. Practically:
- a. The students could add their knowledge about deixis, the types of deixis, and the use of deixis according to the context.

- b. Readers could get more information about deixis and its types especially those used on Presidential Debate Trump vs Hillary.
- c. The researchers could add their knowledge and to make it as a reference for future studies.

CHAPTER II

THE REVIEW OF LITERATURE

A. Theoretical Framework

To conduct a research, there some theories was needed to explain some concept and term to be applied in the research. The theoretical elaboration on the concept and terms used would be presented in the following part.

1. Pragmatic

Pragmatics is concerned with the study of the relationship between expression and the use of this expression in a communicative situation, particularly the relationship between sentences and context and situation in which they occur. Leech (1996: 70) states that pragmatics is study of how meaning get to interpret in communicative situation in relation to the roles of the speaker and the hearer. Thus, pragmatics be defined as the study of the relationship between language and context which are used based on situation in order to get some meaning.

2. Deixis in Pragmatic

Deixis is also mentioned as indexicals. By deixis, we mean pointers or something that points to other things. In order words, indexicals are linguistic forms or expressions that refer to other things. In a sense, deixis can be a synonym of language expressions. For that reason, deixis is one of the essential and earliest marking elements of pragmatics, and falls under pragmatic investigation at the very birth of this independent field of learning.

For those who want to treat language as a generative system for objectively describing the world, deixis is one hell of a big black fly in the ointment. Deixis introduces subjective, attentional, intentional and of course context-dependent properties into natural languages. Further, it is a much more pervasive feature of languages than normally recognized, and is theoretically puzzling in many regards.

All this makes difficult a tidy treatment within formal theories of semantics and pragmatics. Deixis also seems critical for our ability to learn a language, which philosophers for centuries have thought to be closely linked to the possibility of ostensive definition. Despite this theoretical importance, the subject is as far as empirical investigations go one of the most understudied core areas of pragmatics, and we are far from understanding the boundaries of the phenomena, and have no adequate cross-linguistic typology of most kinds of deictic expression. This article does not attempt to review either all the relevant theory.

Rather, an attempt is made to pinpoint some of the most tantalizing theoretical and descriptive problems, to sketch the way in which the subject interacts with other aspects of pragmatics, and to illustrate – through concentration on demonstratives – the kind of advances that could be made with further empirical work. A word on terminology: I will use the terms deixis and 'indexicality' pretty much coextensively. They simply come from different traditions and have become associated with linguistic and philosophical approaches respectively. But I will make this distinction: indexicality will be used to label the broader phenomena of contextual dependency, and deixis the narrower linguistically-relevant aspects of indexicality.

3. Deixis

Griffiths (2006) refers to deixis expressions as words, phrases and features of grammar that have to be interpreted in relation to the situation in which they are uttered. He further states that deixis is pervasive in languages, probably because, in indicating 'when', 'where', 'who', 'what' and so on, it is very useful to start with the coordinates of the situation of utterance. This means that deixis or deictic expression provide context clues for the participants in discourse. They locate the persons, as well as the time and place in which language is used.

Matthew (1997) describes deixis as the way in which the reference of certain elements in a sentence is determined in relation to a specific speaker and addressee and a specific time and place of utterance. Deixis as described in many linguistic studies such as cited above are reference devices through which participants in a discourse are traced or identified; and their time and place of actions are specified. These devices help participants in a discourse to give the reader or listener the clear picture of the context in which language is used.

Levinson (1983: 54) states that deixis concerns the way in which languages encode or grammaticalize features of the context of utterance or speech event, and thus also concerns ways in which the interpretation of utterances depends on the analysis of that context of utterance. In other words, person deixis is described as expression in which to refer to person who the speakers intend to refer a person deixis, b. place deixis, c. time deixis, d. discourse deixis, d. social deixis.

Based on the explanation above, the researcher conclude that deixis is like reference, with which it overlaps, it relates to their context of occurrence. But deixis is both broader and narrower than reference. Deixis is one of the study to know what the meaning from utterances. The researcher will use Levinson's theory to do an analyzes because Levinson's theory is more easily to understand.

4. Deixis based on Levinson's Theory

4.1 Definition of Deixis

The term deixis is borrowed from the greek word Deiktikos which mean for pointing or indicating (Levinson 1983:54). Deixis is a word or phrase which directly relates an utterance to a person, time, place, social and discourse. For example:

(1) Jack was born in Jakarta. He lived there for ten years.

The word he and there are deixis

Deixis is the study how to analyze word or phrase which directly relates and utterance to a person, time, place, social and discourse. It concerned with the encoding of many different aspects of the circumstances surrounding the utterance and the relationship between the structure of language and context in which they are being used, and deixis is the study about how to encode or grammaticalize features of the context of the utterance or speech event, and also about the way in how to interpretation of utterances depends on analysis of the context utterance.

4.2 Types of Deixis

Every linguist has his/her own view and opinion about types of deixis. There are several types of deixis as follows person deixis, time deixis, place deixis, discourse deixis, and social deixis. In this research, the discussion is focused only on five parts of deixis based on Stephen C. Levinson theory, namely person deixis, place deixis, time deixis, discourse deixis and social deixis.

Types of deixis based on Levinson (1983: 65) they are:

4.2.1 Person Deixis

Person deixis concerns the encoding of the role of participants in the speech event in which the utterance in the question delivered. Person deixis is related directly in the grammatical categories of person. The speaker of spokesman can be different from the source of an utterance and the recipient is different from the targets and the hearer of the bystanders is different from the addressee or targets. The category first person is the grammaticalization of the speaker's reference to himself, second person he encoding of the speaker's reference to one or more addressees, and third person the encoding of reference to personal and entities which are neither speakers nor addresses of the utterance in question (Levinson 1985: 62). For example:

- (2) She watched a television
- (3) Could you open the door, please!
- (4) I've lost the pen
- (5) They played cricket on Sunday

The word she, you, I, and they are person deixis because it is related directly in the grammatical categories of person.

4.2.2 Place Deixis

As stated by Cruse (2000: 320), spatial or place deixis manifest itself principally in the form of locative adverbs such as here and there, and demonstratives/determiners such as this and that. As quoted by Levinson (1983), the importance of location specification in general can be gauged from the fact that there seem to be two basic ways of referring to objects: By describing or naming them on the one hand and By locating them on the other hand. Examples:

- (6) The hospital is three kilometers from Edward house. That is too far for him.
- (7) Jacob goes to the beach and Bella will be there for him.

The word hospital and the beach are place deixis because it is related to a location relative to the location of a participants in the speech event.

4.2.3 Time Deixis

Like all aspects of deixis, time deixis makes ultimate reference to participant role. Time deixis concern the encoding of temporal points and spans relative to the time at which the utterance was spoken or written message inscribed (Levinson 1983: 62). The basic for the system of reckoning and measuring time in most languages seem to be natural and prominent styles of day and night, lunar months, seasons and year. They can be used calendrically to locate event in absolute time or at least to some art of each natural cycle designate as the beginning of that cycle.

For example:

- (8) Tomorrow is my birthday.
- (9) I am very busy now

The word tomorrow and now are time deixis because it is reference to time relative to a temporal reference point. Typically, this point is the moment of utterance

4.2.4 Discourse Deixis

Discourse deixis has to do with the encoding of reference to portions of unfolding discourse in which the utterance to refer to some portion of the discourse that contains that utterances (including the utterances itself). We may also include in discourse deixis a number further ways in which an utterance signal is relation to surrounding text. Instances of discourse are the use of 'that and 'this in the following:

- (10) I bet you haven't heard this story
- (11) That was the funniest story I've ever heard

Thus 'this' can be used to refer to a forthcoming of the discourse, and 'that' to a preceding portion. A great deal of the discussion of such topic markers has been concerned with the sentences internal organization of information as given and new comment about the topic. But it is clear that a mayor function of topic marking is precisely to relate the marked utterance to some specifies topic raised in the prior discourse, to perform a discourse deictic function. The following seems to mark the topic of the sentence:

- (12) That blouse, it's simply stunning
- (13) Guna, is the man coming down then.

Actual usage seem to show that items placed in this position really do correlate with discourse topic or what the participant are talking about although not always in simple ways.

4.2.5 Social Deixis

Social deixis concerned with the encoding of destination that are relative to participant roles, particularly aspect of the social relationship holding between speaker and addressee (s) or speaker and some referent (Levinson 1983: 63). Social deixis also concern with the aspect of sentences that reflect by certain realities of the social situation in which the utterances occurs.

For example:

- (14) Mr for sir
- (15) Lady for girl
- (16) Miss for woman
- (17) Vice president Jusuf Kalla

In summary, social deixis occurs in many aspect of language usage that depend on the relation (social relationship) but these usage are only relevant to the topic of social deixis in so far as grammatical.

5. Debate

Debate is a formal contest of argumentation between two teams or individuals. Debate is a method of formally presenting an argument in a structured manner Through logical consistency, factual accuracy and some degree of emotional appeal to the audience are elements in debating, where one side often prevails over the other party by presenting a superior "context" and/or framework of the issue. The outcome of a debate may depend upon consensus or some formal way of reaching a resolution, rather than the objective facts. In a formal debating contest, there are rules for participants to discuss and decide on differences, within a framework defining how they will interact.

Debating is carried out in debating chambers and assemblies of various types to discuss matters and to make resolutions about action to be taken, often by voting. Deliberative bodies such as parliaments, legislative assemblies, and meetings of all sorts engage in debates. In particular, in parliamentary democracies a legislature debates and decides on new laws. Formal debates between candidates for elected office, such as the leaders debates that are sometimes held in democracies. Debating is also carried out for educational and recreational purposes, usually associated with educational establishments and debating societies. The major goal of the study of debate as a method or art is to develop the ability to debate rationally from either position with equal ease.

Informal and forum debate is relatively common, shown by TV shows such as the Australian talk show, Q&A the quality and depth of a debate improves with the knowledge and skills of its participants as debaters. The outcome of a contest may be decided by audience vote, by judges, or by some combination of the two.

More broadly, and more importantly, debate is an essential tool for developing and maintaining democracy and open societies. More than a mere verbal or performance skill, debate embodies the ideals of reasoned argument, tolerance for divergent points of view and rigorous self-examination. Debate is, above all, a way for those who hold opposing views to discuss controversial issues without descending to insult, emotional appeals or personal bias. A key trademark of debate is that it rarely ends in agreement, but rather allows for a robust analysis of the question at hand. Perhaps this is what French philosopher Joseph Joubert meant when he said: "It is better to debate a question without settling it, than to settle a question without debating it."

6. Presidential Debate

Alan Schroeder (2008: 32) states that when two people who are essentially the same talk out of their asses for a few hours, in order to create the illusion of democracy. Always the two people the media want you to vote for, not necessarily the best candidates. All third-party candidates are physically locked out of the debates. Because of this, American politics has degenerated into a puppet show. To the extent that the debates are important in terms of persuasion, the format may slightly favor the challenger, about whom the public knows less.

Though reporters often look for a winner and loser, viewers experience the debate differently, making two simultaneous judgments: One, whether or not the candidate seems "big enough" to be president; and two, whether one of the candidates is a better choice.

Robert Erikson (2012: 54) states that the debates are two-sided clash of competing ideas, unmediated by interpretation from reporters, spiked voter knowledge. In these often disparaged encounters, the presidential and vice presidential nominees took on the deceptions perpetrated by the other side, including those on health care and taxing proposals."

One noteworthy area of potential impact of the debates is their capacity for what political scientists call "agenda setting": The salience of a given policy or campaign issue in the public mind can rise as a result, and this may play to the strength or weakness of a particular campaign.

Still, political scientists caution against overestimating the influence and even democratic utility of debates in general; and they put caveats on the ability of social science to measure their true effects. Experimental studies confirm that citizens have a great deal of difficulty making meaningful judgments about two competing messages and assertions of fact, as in a debate setting. Increased voter knowledge on issues, too, does not necessarily equal persuasion, and studies confirm the idea that the debates reinforce partisan positions, with partisans merely becoming more critical. Moreover, the debates are only one communications data point in the campaign taking place amid a sea of ads and other cultural conversations and are difficult to disentangle from other dynamics.

As the Pew Research Center has consistently found through the years, nearly two-thirds of voters often say the debates were "very" or "somewhat" helpful in decision-making, while voters say the candidates' commercials were not helpful. However, some scholars think that, when asked about the influence of debates, citizens are predisposed to assign them outsized significance. They conform to ideas of rational deliberation and to downplay the power of negative ads and other such opinion-shaping communications.

During presidential elections in the United States, it has become customary for the main candidates (almost always the candidates of the two largest parties, currently the Democratic Party and the Republican Party) to engage in a debate. The topics discussed in the debate are often the most controversial issues of the time, and arguably elections have been nearly decided by these debates (e.g., Nixon vs. Kennedy). Candidate debates are not constitutionally mandated, but it is now considered a de facto election process.^[1] The debates are targeted mainly at undecided voters; those who tend not to be partial to any political ideology or party.

Presidential debates are held late in the election cycle, after the political parties have nominated their candidates. The candidates meet in a large hall, often at a university, before an audience of citizens. The formats of the debates have varied, with questions sometimes posed from one or more journalist moderators and in other cases members of the audience. Between 1988 and 2000, the formats have been governed in detail by secret memoranda of understanding (MOU) between the two major candidates; an MOU for 2004 was also negotiated, but unlike the earlier agreements it was jointly released by the two candidates.

Debates have been broadcast live on television, radio, and in recent years, the web. The first debate for the 1960 election drew over 66 million viewers out of a population of 179 million, making it one of the most-watched broadcasts in U.S. television history. The 1980 debates drew 80 million viewers out of a population of 226 million. Recent debates have drawn decidedly smaller audiences, ranging from 46 million for the first 2000 debate to a high of over 67 million for the first debate in 2012. A record-breaking audience of over 84 million people watched the first 2016 presidential debate between Donald Trump and Hillary Clinton, a number that does not reflect online streaming.

7. Donald Trump

Donald John Trump born June 14, 1946 is an American businessman and politician, and the President-elect of the United States. His presidential transition is underway, and he is scheduled to be inaugurated on January 20, 2017.

Trump was born and raised in Queens, New York City, and earned an economics degree from the Wharton School of the University of Pennsylvania. He then took charge of The Trump Organization, the real estate and construction firm founded by his paternal grandmother, which he ran for four and a half decades until 2017. During his real estate and business career, Trump built, renovated, and managed numerous office towers, hotels, casinos, and golf courses. He has lent the use of his name for the branding of various products and properties. He owned the Miss USA and Miss Universe pageants from 1996 to 2015, and he hosted The Apprentice, a reality television series on NBC, from 2004 to 2015. As of 2017, Forbes listed him as the 544th wealthiest person in the world (201st in the United States) with a net worth of $3.5 billion.

Trump first publicly expressed interest in running for political office in 1987. He won two Reform Party presidential primaries in 2000, but withdrew his candidacy early on. In June 2015, he launched his campaign for the 2016 presidential election, and quickly emerged as the front-runner among 17 candidates in the Republican primaries. His final opponents suspended their campaigns in May 2016, and in July he was formally nominated at the Republican National Convention along with Indiana governor Mike Pence as his running mate. His campaign received unprecedented media coverage and international attention. Many of the statements that he made in interviews, on social media, and at campaign rallies were controversial or false.

Trump won the general election on November 8, 2016, in a surprise victory against Democratic opponent Hillary Clinton. He became the oldest and wealthiest person to assume the presidency, the first without prior military or government service, and the fifth elected with less than a plurality of the national popular vote. His political positions have been described by scholars and commentators as populist, protectionist, and nationalist.

8. Hillary Clinton

Hillary Diane Rodham Clinton born October 26, 1947) is an American politician who was the 67th United States Secretary of State from 2009 to 2013, U.S. Senator from New York from 2001 to 2009, and First Lady of the United States from 1993 to 2001. She was the Democratic Party's nominee for President of the United States in the 2016 election.

As First Lady of the United States, Clinton fought for gender equality and healthcare reform. Because her marriage survived the Lewinsky scandal, her role as first lady drew a polarized response from the public. Clinton was elected in 2000 as the first female senator from New York. She was re-elected to the Senate in 2006. Running for president in 2008, she won far more delegates than any previous female candidate, but lost the Democratic nomination to Barack Obama.

As Secretary of State in the Obama administration from 2009 to 2013, Clinton responded to the Arab Spring, during which she advocated the U.S. military intervention in Libya. She helped organize a diplomatic isolation and international sanctions regime against Iran, in an effort to force curtailment of that country's nuclear program; this would eventually lead to the multinational Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action agreement in 2015. Leaving office after Obama's first term, she wrote her fifth book and undertook speaking engagements.

Clinton made a second presidential run in 2016. She received the most votes and primary delegates in the 2016 Democratic primaries, and formally accepted her party's nomination for President of the United States on July 28, 2016 with vice presidential running mate Senator Tim Kaine. She became the first female candidate to be nominated for president by a major U.S. political party. Despite winning a plurality of the national popular vote, Clinton lost the Electoral College and the presidency to her Republican rival Donald Trump.^[2]

B. Previous Relevant Studies

There are some research had been conducted related this study. The first research is in journal of Argian Ekawati, Ahmad Sofian (2014) vol 43 No 2 entitled: The use of Pragmatic Deixis in Conversation Text in "Pathway to English". The study aims at finding out deictic words in conversation and explaining how they were realized under what context. The study used a descriptive qualitative-quantitative method. To get the data, the researcher used an observation technique. Thirteen conversation texts were chosen, taken from an English textbook "Pathway to English" for Senior High School. The result showed that the most dominant deixis appeared in the conversation was person deixis. Person deixis appeared 234 times. Discourse deixis appeared 47 times. Place deixis appeared 16 times. Time deixis appeared 15 times, and social deixis appeared 12 time. Based on the context in the conversations, the person deixis of pronoun "I", "You", "They", "He", and "She" could be used to refer to an imaginary person in real life, while "We" could also mean a unity. Therefore, it is crucial to consider context-dependency in reading or having conversations with people, as it arrives at a correct interpretation of the utterance.

The second research is in journal of Christiana Eragbe (2015) vol 3 No. 3 entitled: The Use Of Deixis And Deictic Expressions In Boko Haram Insurgency Reports: A Study Of Selected Boko Haram Insurgency Reports By The Media. This paper examines the uses of deictic expressions in Boko Haram insurgency reports by the media in the four affected countries of West Africa. The study was carried out using qualitative approach to explore the incidences and functions of deictic expressions in Boko Haram insurgency reports by the media. The result of the investigation shows that media reporters use person, time/temporal and place/spatial deixis to locate the participants in discourse. Spotting of the participants in discourse via deictic expressions give the audience clear picture of the incidence of insurgency reported on. Deictic expressions as used in insurgency reports point to the insurgents, or the victims, the place of operation and time. Then she put together enhances cohesion and coherence in the discourse of Boko Haram insurgency reports.

The third research is in journal of Fransisco Javier (2006) vol 3 entitled: Deixis and Verbal Politeness in Request Production in English and Spanish. The main aim of this article is to analyze the links between time and person deixis, and the expression of verbal politeness in English and Spanish. The research instrument implemented has been a discourse completion test, which has been adiministered to native speakers of English and Spanish and to non-native. English speakers whose mother tongue is Spanish. The results obtained show that there exists a close connection between the notions of deixis and verbal politeness in English and Spanish. However, significant differences have also been observed between both languages in this respect. The differences between third previous research with this research is the third research focus on deixis of native speaker of English and Spanish.

So, the differences among previous research above with this research is in this research, the researcher just focus on deixis on Presidential Debate Trump vs Hillary.

CHAPTER III

METHOD OF RESEARCH

A. Research Design

The data that may have been collected in a variety of ways (observation, interviews, essence, documents, tape) and are usually processed through recording, typing and editing. Qualitative research is often referred to as naturalistic research methods (natural setting), because of research done on the condition that a natural and we can say that method qualitative data collected and analysis is more qualitative.

Qualitative research is used to obtain in dept data, the data containing the meaning or definite data and a vale beyond data looks. Therefore, in this study does not emphasize generalizations, but more emphasis on meaning.

- 4. Identifying the deixis by Levinson theory.
- 5. Underlining it.

D. The Technique for Analyzing Data

There were some steps to analyze qualitative research according to Miles and Huberman (2012):

- 1. Data Reduction: Data reduction occurs continually throughout the analysis. In the early stages, it happens through editing, segmenting and summarizing the data. In the middle stages, it happens through coding and memoing, and associated activities such as finding themes, clusters and patterns. In the later stages, it happens through conceptualizing and explaining, since developing abstract concepts also a way of reducing the data.
- 2. Data display: Data display organize, compress and assemble information. Because qualitative data are typically voluminous, bulky and dispersed, displays help at all stages in the analysis. There are many different ways of displaying data: graphs, charts, networks, diagrams of different types, and any way that moves the analysis forward is appropriate. Displays are used all stages, since they enable data to be organized and summarized, they show what stage the analysis has reached and they are the basis for further analysis.

3. Drawing and verifying conclusions: The reasons for reducing for reducing and displaying data are to assist in drawing conclusions. While drawing conclusions logically follows reduction and display or data, in fact it takes place more or less concurrently with them. Thus possible conclusions may be noted early in the analysis, but they may vague and ill formed at this stage. They are held tentative pending further work, and sharpened during it. They are not finalized until all the data are in, and have been analyzed. Conclusions will be in the form of propositions, and once they have been drawn, they need to be verified.
